are the localities now talked of.

A gold watch, valued at twenty-five guineas, the property of Mr. Adam Heyer, which was deposited at the bottom of his carpet bag, was stolen from the Royal Hotel on Saturday last. A reward of £5 is offered for its recovery.

In your last communication you committed a typographical error, in stating that the diggers at the back of Sofia were obtaining ten ounces a day in the place of one ounce. As such a statement may give rise to very erroneous opinions, I have taken this opportunity of correcting it.

never promised to do. A man ploughed his field, and sowed his seed, and then asked God for a good harvest, which he might then reasonably expect; but suppose he left a portion of his field unploughed and unsown, and prayed for a good harvest; then also was he likely to get it? (Laughter and cheers.) Prayer was indeed necessary; but exertion must run parallel with it. Thus, all may be employed in forwarding the great work; but all could not bring down power from heaven. This was the peculiar province of those spiritual men whose constant importunities were before the throne of grace. But let them do what they could; let them give their money. Let the nominal Christian contribute his means, and the spiritual man would bring down the power. This was Christ's own work. Christ was deeply interested in its success. He had laid (Chera.) Some of them doubted had little boy or little girl in heaven; although they might grieve at their loss, had not Jesus saved them from the troubles and expenses those children would impose upon them, by taking them at once and associating them with the angels; and were they not dearly indubitable? The Rev. ROBERT YOUNG seconded the motion. He said the object of missionary enterprise, which they had this evening met to forward, was nothing short of the conversion of the whole world. They could think of nothing greater, nor could they aim at anything less; and for the accomplishment of this object the word or deed, as had been well said by the previous speaker, was absolutely necessary; not a single soul could be converted without the word of God in some form; men were not born again, but by the Word of God—they were not sanctified but by His word; they were not made clean, but by the words of Christ; for faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God—and where there is no vision the people perish. (Cheers.) This consideration led the Christian under very great responsibility in view of a perishing world. To pass this as an unimportant nger impeded by that dreadful scourge of a flood. It is consoling to know that the Christians in Kaffirland were spared the attack.

Foreign Bible Society had done a great deal by the circulation of the holy scriptures; but their exertions were not sufficient. They indeed placed in the hands of men the words of eternal life, but the missionary was required to make them understand that word, and to preach Jesus to their souls. The Bible Society sent forth a stream of divine truth, which flowed in a wide and ever-expanding river through the world; but the missionary was required to stand upon both banks, like the fisherman, but, unlike him, to catch not fish but the souls of men. The Bible Society launched the life-boat on the dark and stormy ocean of humanity; but it was the missionary who manned the boat, risking his life to save the souls of his fellow-men from eternal death, and thus hiding a multitude of sins. Divine truth must be presented to men by living men, and therefore

The earth was the instrument of salvation, and it must be accompanied by the influence of the Holy Ghost, which influence God would only give when there is answer to fervent prayer. Praying might be likened to the depositing of seeds on the ground, but prayer caused the heavens to drop from above, and the skies to pour down righteousness, so that the seed germinated, and produced first the blade and then the ear, and then full corn in the ear. The preaching of the Gospel laid a powerful train around the human heart, and the strongholds of idolatry

There were many things in the present state of the world highly favourable to missionary exertion. During the last fifty years a very favourable change had taken place, which was chiefly owing to the noble efforts of the Missionary Society, which had created an spirit of amity, and the circulation of the Bible a highway was opened to the desert for our God. The two greatest Obstacles to our progress were the unbelief of the heathen themselves awakening to the unsatisfactory state their people were in; and the heathen in many lands were becoming disgusted with their errors and idolatries. Her possessions were extensively scattered—millions of heathen people had been brought under her salutary sceptre—her flag was seen and honored in every zone—her language was spoken in every quarter of the globe—her manufactures were known in every market; in Europe, in Asia, in Africa, in America, in Australia, and in the islands of the ocean her sons were to be found—she had opened the way of access to all tribes of men.

and under the influence and patronage of her glorious standard the glad tidings of salvation were carried to every nation and family under the sun. (Cheers.) Great Britain was taking a leading part in building up the walls of Zion. This it was that marked her out as the queen among the nations of the world—this likened her to the Angel in the Apocalypses, for she had the everlasting Gospel in her hand, to preach to them that were without the Church, and to
